

A Guide To Decorative Lighting

Lighting is an incredibly versatile tool. It can be used in so many different places and different ways. Some product lighting groups are designed to be subtle and soft; the only element of these kind of products that we want or need to see is the light itself. In other instances, the glow of the light isn't the only thing we're interested in!

Decorative lighting is any light where the appearance of the light fitting is just as important as the light it is producing. This type of light can come in many varying forms for many different areas of the home.

Pendant Lighting

Pendant lights are an interesting addition to the list of decorative lighting areas that are available. This is because pendants are task lights, meaning they are used to assist with important tasks around the home, such as preparing food or reading a book.

There are many variations of pendant lights: some are small and simple, others are large and showstopping. Here at TLW we have a vast range of pendant lights in many styles and finishes. Our product range has grown significantly over recent years as the way that people are installing pendants is always changing. Many people will choose to have a single drop pendant over a kitchen or dining room table as a simple piece to add much needed light to the space, whereas others will select 3 different pendants and group them together over a kitchen island.
